

Trauma Responsive Play

March 25, 2026 | 9:00 am - 12:30 pm

We've responded to your feedback:
We are bringing you a new version of Trauma Responsive Play with even more activities and skills that you can introduce directly into your practice or parenting.

This training will build on the known impacts of trauma to help you reach and engage children, facilitate healing, and stimulate healthier, more responsive relationships between parents and kids after adversity. It will offer the structure and skill professionals and parents need to understand and leverage playful moments to enhance secure bonding, build emotion regulation, and increase our ability to manage children's stress responses calmly and effectively.

After this highly interactive training, you'll walk away with a deeper understanding of how play-based supports for trauma in early and middle childhood can provide a second language of play – which is really the child's first language – through which they can express, work on, and release traumatized patterns and strengthen their most important caregiving relationships.

Join us to learn key strategies for balancing a child's stress response system so they can look to the future feeling more capable, worthy, and secure in themselves and the key figures in their life.
